After the death of Cleveland don, John Scalish, Greene joined forces with disgruntled Italian mobster, John Nardi. The two gangsters and their minions waged a savage street war against the Mayfield Road Mob for control of organized crime in the area. Bombs were the weapons of choice, and soon there were so many bombings in the Cleveland area perpetrated by the warring factions that the local press dubbed Cleveland, "The Bomb Capital of the USA." Greene, after being approached by a smooth-talking FBI agent, decided it was in his best interest to become a canary. As a result, he sang a sweet tune to the Feds, informing them of the illegal activities of Cleveland's Mayfield Road Mob and the Italian gangsters who ran the operation. In the end, Danny Greene, feared Irish mobster, became what his Irish ancestors hated most - a rat. "Mob Rats - Danny Greene" will fill you in on the gory details. Interesting info on the mob

I love reading about the Mafia and Mr. Bruno does not short change you. His work is exciting and puts the reader front and center of the action. Its like you are there watching the movement, machinations and after effects of the results that the players come up with. I am your biggest fan Mr. Bruno!

I always enjoy reading about the mob, and this was another good, quick read. I had no idea there were so many bombings in Cleveland.

Good insight to D. Greene and his arrogance. I grew up in Cleveland and have 1st hand insight to the many things that happened in this era. Collinwood to Lyndhurst.

Typical mob story! Although he does outlive a lot of his cohorts,, they get him,, eventually! He was arrogant in the fact that he thought he couldn't be killed! But he was proven wrong!

Bruno has a unique style of writing,not the worst mafia book,but far from the best either.I enjoyed the book though , an easy read.

Fascinating

An interesting look inside a secret society that we could only imagine up until now
